

Lewis Precipitates Labor Crisis By Calling Captive Mine Strike

But George Lynch has the courage of his convictions and he made his convictions clear long before the vote was taken in an editorial in the Pattermakers' Journal. In that statement he declared he was against Government imposition of the closed shop on the sound ground that what the Government gives it can also take away. He voted his convictions.

Bill Calvin at first was inclined to vote for Lewis. But after listening to the case made by both sides, he was convinced that it would be a mistake for the Board to grant Lewis' demands. So he, too, voted his convictions. We take off our hats to both of them.
